

SEEING GREEN

Jonathon Porritt
Foreword by Petra Kelly

During the last few years the impact and significance of the green movement has been much more widely recognised. But the policies behind the movement are frequently underestimated and misunderstood. For not only are the Greens saying something completely different from the established political parties, they are saying it in a different way.

Seeing Green by Jonathon Porritt, Director of the Friends of the Earth, and a leading member of the Ecology Party, is the first book on green politics in Britain. In a personal, informative style, without the jargon of manifestos, it explains the nature and origins of the recent green upsurge and sets out the aims and hopes of greens the world over. Jonathon Porritt makes it clear why our industrial way of life cannot be sustained much longer and looks at the hidden costs - economic, social, environmental and spiritual - that undermine our real standard of living. The foreword by Petra Kelly, leader of the Greens in West Germany, sets the book firmly within the context of European Green politics.

Of interest to anyone concerned about society today, Seeing Green presents a new set of solutions, an irrefutable case for immediate action, and a challenge that most politicians will find extremely uncomfortable.
